managed by Canadian engineer Rick Gregory, also of WS Atkins. Construction of the island began in 1994 and involved up to 2,000 construction workers during peak construction. It was built to resemble the billowing spinnaker sail of a J-class yacht.[15] Two "wings" spread in a V to form a vast "mast", while the space between them is enclosed in a massive atrium.

The hotel was built by South African construction contractor Murray & Roberts, now renamed Concor and Al Habtoor Engineering. The interior designs were led and created by Khuan Chew and John Coralan of KCA international and delivered by UAE based Depa <h1>DubaiGarden</h1> There are 60 different varieties of flowers on site, including petunias, geraniums and marigolds. Flowers are preserved by re-using waste water through drip irrigation.

        The gardens are closed during Dubai's notoriously hot summer months. Temperatures average 40 C (104 F) from June to September -- not exactly conducive to flower gazing.
        However, the sanctuary is also home to the region's first indoor butterfly garden and sanctuary, Dubai Butterfly Garden, which is open all year round.

        <h1>Sand Boading</h1> Dubai, also known as the “Desert City”, is a paradise for sandboarders and sandsports lovers in general, and so is the rest of the United Arab Emirates (UAE). The Arabian Desert, one of the largest desartic areas in the world, offers some of the most suggestive landscapes in the world, attracting tourists and adrenaline seekers from all over the world. For a quintessential Dubai experience, you must go on a desert safari with dune bashing – the Arab version of sand duning, which involves driving at very fast speeds on very bumpy sand dunes, and of course, enjoy some incredible sandboarding on one of the countless sand red dunes in the area.

Construction of the island began in 1994 and involved up to 2,000 construction workers during peak construction. It was built to resemble the billowing spinnaker sail of a J-class yacht.[15] Two "wings" spread in a V to form a vast "mast", while the space between them is enclosed in a massive atrium. The hotel was built by South African construction contractor Murray & Roberts, now renamed Concor and Al Habtoor Engineering. The interior designs were led and created by Khuan Chew and John Coralan of KCA International and delivered by UAE based Depa

DubaiGarden

There are 60 different varieties of flowers on site, including petunias, geraniums and marigolds. Flowers are preserved by re-using waste water through drip irrigation. The gardens are closed during Dubai's notoriously hot summer months. Temperatures average 40 C (104°F) from June to September – not exactly conducive to flower gazing. However, the sanctuary is also home to the region's first indoor butterfly garden and sanctuary, Dubai Butterfly Garden, which is open all year round. Sand Boating

Dubai, also known as the "Desert City", is a paradise for sandboarders and sandsports lovers in general, and so is the rest of the United Arab Emirates (UAE). The Arabian Desert, one of the largest desertic areas in the world, offers some of the most suggestive landscapes in the world, attracting tourists and adrenaline seekers from all over the world. For a quintessential Dubai experience, you must go on a desert safari with dune bashing – the Arab version of sand duning, which involves driving at very fast speeds on very bumpy sand dunes, and of course, enjoy some incredible sandboarding on one of the countless sand red dunes in the area.
